'It's Life or Death': The Mental Health Crisis Among U.S. Teens

Depression, self-harm and suicide are rising among American adolescents. For one 13-year-old, the despair was almost too much to take.

"From 2015 to 2019, prescriptions for antidepressants rose 38 percent for teenagers compared with 15 percent for adults."

"LIFE OR DEATH": THE MENTAL HEALTH CRISIS AMONG U.S. TEENS

Published April 23, 2022 Updated April 26, 2022

One evening last April, an anxious and free-spirited 13-year-old girl was hospitalized after a suicide attempt. Her story is one of the many

Factors Contributing to Perceived Mental Health Decline

- Mark of COVID
- The over-interpretation of emotions as disorders
- The risky messaging of the wellness industry
- The misleading use of health statistics to create an exaggerated representation of what's happening with teens' mental health

Psychology Today

- "...over about a decade, an alarming 48 percent increase in such emergency room visits [for nonfatal self-harm] among American girls ages 15 to 19 and a shocking 188 percent increase among girls ages 10 to 14."
- "The effect of these bureaucratic changes on hospitalization data presumably varied from place to place. But in one place where it has been studied systematically, New Jersey, where 90 percent of children had health coverage even before the A.C.A., researchers have found that the changes explain nearly all of the state's apparent upward trend in suicide-related hospital visits, turning what were "essentially flat" trendlines into something that looked like a youth mental health "crisis."

Disclosure

- My survey data's youngest participants were born in 2002.
 - More Investigation is needed to definitively understand how the younger generations are handling mental health.
- Mental Health is undoubtedly a large and relevant issue. Many Americans suffer from depression and other mental disorders from stressful circumstances, cultural expectations, and isolation.

Let's look at Survey Data

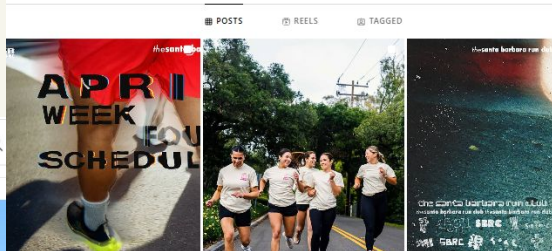

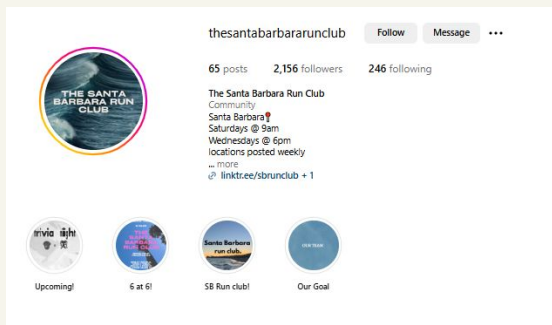

Sourced from Census Bureau
Household Pulse Survey, 2020-2024

So what?

- Covid does not define our future
- Creating community in a time of isolation will help us to improve realized mental health.
 - Get out in community
 - Invite others into community

24 And let us consider how we may spur one another on toward love and good deeds, 25 not giving up meeting together, as some are in the habit of doing, but encouraging one another—and all the more as you see the Day approaching. Hebrews 10:24-25
